DRAFT

A Guide to Low-Cost Curricula and Resources for Marriage and Relationship, Fatherhood and Parenting, and Financial Education¹

Are you looking for low-cost or free curricula to support efforts to strengthen relationships for singles, couples, parents or families? This guide will help you find Web-based and other resources including materials developed with federal funding that are available for public distribution. It is the second in a series of guides designed by Administration for Children and Families' (ACF) Healthy Marriage Initiative staff to support the implementation of valuable programs under the Healthy Marriage and Responsible Fatherhood Initiatives.

The guide offers an alphabetized list of curricula and resources in three areas: (1) Marriage and Relationship, (2) Fatherhood and Parenting, and (3) Financial Education. Although this is not an exhaustive compilation, we have included materials about financial literacy because many organizations have indicated a need for this type of information. "Curricula" refers to an organized set of ideas and activities that seek to meet specific learning objectives. These may include instructional booklets, lesson plans, discussion guides or an outline of topics and activities developed specifically for an educational activity. "Resources" are defined more broadly and include handouts, tip sheets and other supplementary materials for program implementation, marketing or general knowledge. The basic criterion for including a listing in the guide is based on whether the cost of instructor manual or teaching resource is $250 or less. Many materials are free. Each listing includes the names of the author(s) or curriculum developers, a short description, contact information and cost.

In the introduction to the ACF Marriage Education Curriculum Guide (2007, available at http://www.acf.hhs.gov/healthymarriage/doc/ACF_Curriculum_Assessment_Guide.doc), we noted one of the most important decisions to be made is the choice of curriculum. There is a wide variety of marriage education curricula designed to educate different types of audiences or designed for specific delivery contexts or approaches. We realize that curriculum selection is a time-consuming process that can entail a significant financial investment by an organization for the purchase of materials and staff training. Whether you must rely totally on free or low-cost materials, wish to augment your offerings or want to gain some experience delivering marriage education services before making a major outlay of human or monetary resources, we encourage you to make informed choices. Once you identify potentially useful marriage education materials, we recommend that you use the ACF Marriage Education Curriculum Assessment Guide as part of your review and comparison process.

There are legal issues to consider when using materials developed by others. You should always respect the author's copyright. The fact that a grantee or organization has a copyright on materials means that the organization has the exclusive right to reproduce, sell, or otherwise distribute the materials. Therefore, the organization could require that others who wish to sell, reproduce, or otherwise distribute the materials must compensate the organization that has the copyright to the materials. There are several complex exceptions to these rules which include circumstances under which others may use the materials without violating the copyright. Sometimes, the copyright laws permit limited use by another party. Furthermore, material that appears to be available for free use often indicates that you need to obtain the author's permission to use it. When in doubt, consult with the author or publisher.

If you are considering using materials that have been produced as part of a government grant, remember the grantee maintains a copyright on curricula and other materials it produces with federal funds. However, despite this fact, when material has been produced using ACF funding, ACF has a right to distribute and use the work for legitimate government purposes.

Even when others' materials are available for your free use, it is expected that you will properly credit the author's work. After all, give credit where credit is due; the author invested time, energy and intellectual effort to produce a useful product!

Thank you for your interest and your willingness to provide marriage, relationship and fatherhood education to the individuals and couples you serve. Since new materials are continually being developed, please share what you find, so that it can be shared with others. If you have any questions or wish to share information about other free or low-cost resources, please contact Bill Coffin, Special Assistant for Marriage Education at: bill.coffin@acf.hhs.gov .

Please note: The information contained in this guide is provided as a service to the reader. The resources listed are not all inclusive. Their mention should not be construed as implying, in any way, that the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services or the Administration for Children and Families endorses or favors any organization, company, institution, person, activities, products or services. Similarly, an omission from this list does not indicate or suggest disapproval or censure. There may have been price changes since this information was compiled and the cost of any curricular resource is subject to change without notice.

Hispanic Healthy Marriage Curriculum Modules

The Hispanic Healthy Marriage Initiative (HHMI), in partnership with the Annie E. Casey Foundation, is in the final stages of developing several curriculum modules which can be utilized as supplements to healthy marriage and other family strengthening curricula already in use with Hispanic populations. The modules address some of the unique experiences of Hispanic families and examine how culture 1) shapes beliefs and expectations around marriage and family, 2) influences expectations about roles as men and women, and 3) impacts how couples and families communicate. The HHMI curriculum modules will be released in mid-to-late 2009 and will be available, free of charge, through the HHMI website. Contact: Leah Rubio at Leah.Rubio@publicstrategies.com.

Native American Healthy Marriage Initiative (NAHMI)

Developed by the Administration for Children and Families Healthy Marriage Initiative, these targeted grants and resources seek to support projects that include approaches to removing barriers to form and sustain healthy marriages and strengthen families in Native communities. The Native American Healthy Marriage Initiative (NAHMI) promotes culturally competent strategies to strengthen Native American families and communities by fostering healthy marriages, responsible fatherhood and child well-being. The NAHMI includes three components: Education and Communication, The Creation and Enhancement of Collaborations and Partnerships, and Identifying Resources.
